

Double Trouble: Climate Change, Biodiversity Loss, and What We Can Do

A ZOOM Presentation

Wednesday, January 17th – 4:00 – 5:00 pm

Sponsored by the Climate Action Group
the Federated Garden Clubs of Maryland

While sometimes viewed through separate lenses, climate change and biodiversity loss are intimately linked on the national and local levels. Through warming temperatures, increased severe weather events, and changing precipitation patterns, climate change is leading to biodiversity losses. But interestingly enough, increased biodiversity may be one of the nature-based solutions to fight climate change. Learn about how these dual threats affect species worldwide and in Maryland as well as what we can do on the local and national scales.

Our Speaker:

Kerry Wixted is a Maryland naturalist with over 15 years' experience studying flora and fauna of Maryland. She has previously worked for the Maryland Department of Natural Resources and has taught classes for Nature Forward's Natural History Field Studies Program. Kerry holds a B.S. degree in Wildlife and Fisheries Management from Frostburg State University, and a M.S. degree in Biology from West Virginia University.
